Why Is it Necessary to Select Investment Policies?

As provident fund members have different expectations regarding financial returns and different tolerance levels when it comes to risks, one should be able to select investment policies that fit one's needs and be able to modify as necessary to suit one's stage in life. This would allow the provident fund investment to grow sufficiently to financially support retirement. As example, a young provident member would have a relatively long investment horizon, offering greater resilience to securities price fluctuations and the capacity to explore investment in equities to seek higher prospective returns than fixed income investments. On the other hand, an older provident fund member would have a short investment horizon, thus principal protection is of primary importance. This provident fund member should have the ability to direct investments into fixed income securities where market risks are low thereby preventing impairment of one's savings needed to financially support retirement.

Who is the investment policy suitable for?

- Members who can accept securities price volatility, whereby the value of investments may increase or decline below the original sum invested, resulting in a financial loss.
- Members seeking higher long-term investment returns than general fixed income instruments.
- Members seeking to sufficiently grow their provident fund to financially support retirement. Investment policy is not suitable for?

Members emphasizing stability of investment returns and principal protection.
